XJET READIES TO FLY HIGH AT GERALD R. FORD INTERNATIONAL

Grand Rapids, Mich. - May 30, 2007 --- XJet announced today that it has received full Kent County Aeronautics Board approval of its application to provide fixed-based-operations (FBO) services at Gerald R. Ford International Airport. The Company plans to build a two-phased, $10 million, private hangar operation located on the northeast side of the airport's property. The site is directly accessible from the new 36th Street highway interchange off I-96. This will be the first service of this kind in Michigan designed to attract new jet owners to house their aircraft and, ultimately, to increase the number of jet users in the area.

XJet's unique service is designed to integrate exclusive private aviation services and support for the business aircraft community together with the finest amenities and world-class services for private jet owners and charter-service participants. Grand Rapids is the second of eight XJet locations scheduled to open in the next few years. XJet's first location in Denver will open next month.

The Company plans to begin the design and construction bid phase immediately and to announce a construction timeline and groundbreaking by the end of August 2007. Several jet owners have already expressed interest in the Kent County project and location. Reservation agreements will begin formal signing this week with a limited number of aircraft spots available in the first phase.

“Today's announcement supports the Gerald R. Ford International Airport's plans to remain an economic engine in West Michigan,” said Phil Johnson, deputy aeronautics director. “Airports help regions attract business. Offering a variety of higher-end amenities will be an asset to attracting business as more global companies lean on mobility as a decision factor in where they should locate.”
